If a company's tax basis in an asset is less than its carrying amount, the company must recognize a deferred tax liability for the difference. The liability is measured as the amount of tax that will be payable when the asset is recovered or sold. The liability is recognized in the period in which the asset is first placed in service. The liability is reduced as the asset is depreciated or amortized, and is eliminated when the asset's tax basis equals its carrying amount.

(XXV) Revenue

1. Revenue recognition principles

A company recognizes revenue when it is earned and realizable. Revenue is earned when the company has performed its obligation to the customer, and the amount of revenue is fixed or determinable. Revenue is realizable when the company has received cash or a receivable that is collectible.

The company recognizes revenue at the time of sale, delivery, or performance, whichever occurs first. If the company sells goods or services on credit, it recognizes revenue when the goods or services are delivered or performed, and records a receivable. If the company sells goods or services for cash, it recognizes revenue when the cash is received. If the company performs services over time, it recognizes revenue as the services are performed.
